The voyage was conceived and led by Captain John Caldwell, a seasoned sailor with a passion for exploration. Caldwell had previously completed a solo circumnavigation of the globe and was eager to share his love of sailing with others.

The crew of the Second Voyage was a diverse group of people from all walks of life. They included sailors, teachers, doctors, lawyers, and artists.

The crew members were united by their shared love of adventure and their willingness to embrace the unknown.

The Second Voyage was a challenging and rewarding experience for all involved. The crew faced storms, pirates, and other hazards, but they also experienced the beauty and wonder of the world. They learned about different cultures, made lifelong friends, and grew as individuals.

Itinerary

The Second Voyage began in the Caribbean in 1987. The crew sailed from St. Martin to Grenada, then on to Trinidad and Tobago. From there, they crossed the Atlantic Ocean to the Canary Islands.

The crew spent the winter of 1987-1988 in the Canary Islands, where they made repairs to the boat and prepared for the next leg of their journey. In the spring of 1988, they set sail for the Mediterranean Sea.

The crew sailed through the Strait of Gibraltar and into the Mediterranean Sea. They visited Morocco, Spain, France, Italy, Greece, and Turkey. They also sailed through the Suez Canal and into the Red Sea.

The crew spent the winter of 1988-1989 in the Red Sea, where they explored the Egyptian coast and visited the pyramids of Giza. In the spring of 1989, they set sail for the Indian Ocean.

The crew sailed across the Indian Ocean to Sri Lanka and then on to India. They spent the winter of 1989-1990 in India, where they explored the country's rich culture and history.

In the spring of 1990, the crew set sail for the Maldives and then on to the Seychelles. They spent the winter of 1990-1991 in the Seychelles, where they enjoyed the beautiful beaches and crystal-clear waters.

In the spring of 1991, the crew set sail for the Mediterranean Sea. They sailed through the Suez Canal and into the Red Sea. They then sailed through the Strait of Gibraltar and into the Atlantic Ocean.

The crew sailed across the Atlantic Ocean to the Caribbean, where they completed their journey in 1991.

Crew Log

The crew of the Second Voyage kept a detailed log of their journey. The log includes descriptions of the places they visited, the people they met, and the challenges they faced.
